Ah! said one of the men, if I was the skipper I d send the young Tom chicken about his business but the skipper says he knows too much. How long s he going to keep him then? Altogether, I s pose, unless he likes to join us. Ha, ha, ha! laughed the other, who was evidently moving something heavy. Well, he might do worse, my lad. Anyhow, they ar n t going to let him go and bring that cutter down upon us. No, that wouldn t do. Lend a hand here. This bag s heavy. What s in it? I don t know. Feels like lead. P r aps it is. Think the cutter will hang about long? How should I know? I say, though, how staggered them chaps was when they got up to the rock and found no one to fight! I wasn t there. Oh, no--more you wasn t. Come along, come along, lads. Here we are waiting for stowage, and you talk about us keeping you waiting. You mind your own job, growled the voice that Hilary had heard finding fault before. AN AGGRAVATING STORY. 211 There was more scuffling of feet, and then the two men went on talking. The cutter s sailors had come, of course, after the boy, and they stumbled on the way through the rocks, just same as the boy did; and wo waited for em with a few sticks, and then give...
