All Burtons manuscripts were destroyed. He took it philosophically enough, and said, Well, it is a great bore; but I dare say that the world will be none the worse for some of the manuscripts having been burnt. His wife notes this as a prophetic speech; and so it was, when we remember the fate of The Scented Garden thirty years after. The London season came to an end sooner in those days than it does now, and the end of June found the Burtons embarked on a round of visits in country houses. One of the houses they visited at the time was Fryston, Lord Houghtons, and here they met many of the most celebrated people of the day; for wit and beauty, rank and talent, met on common ground around the table of him whom men call Lord Houghton, but the...
